advocating for justice and equality.

In her book "Law and the Disabled," co-authored with Rathin Bandhopadhyay, published by R. Cambray & Co. Pvt. Ltd. in Kolkata in 2011, Dr. Roy delves into the legal framework surrounding disability rights. This publication sheds light on the challenges faced by persons with disabilities and the legal principles that protect their rights.

Her book "Law and Social Transformation," published by Satyam Law International in New Delhi in 2022, examines the intersection of law and social change, providing insights into the role of legal mechanisms in facilitating societal transformation.

Dr. Roy Maitra's articles in various journals contribute to the discourse on disability rights, educational rights, social justice, disaster management, inclusive education, corruption, child sexual abuse, street vending, matrimonial property rights, and the dynamics of social change in contemporary India. Her research articles analyze legal principles, contemporary practices, and existing laws to evaluate the rights and protections afforded to vulnerable groups critically.

Additionally, Dr. Roy Maitra has written chapters in edited books, addressing topics such as gender dimensions to disability human rights, healthcare and reproductive rights of differently-abled women, violence against women with disabilities, privatization of professional education, governmental liability in torts, pollution control, business, and human rights, and pedagogy for human rights education.

Her scholarly work reflects a comprehensive understanding of legal issues and their implications on society. Dr. Sangeeta Roy (Maitra) has made significant contributions to the legal field, advocating for the rights of marginalized communities and promoting social justice and equality through her publications. Her work serves as a valuable resource for academics, legal practitioners, policymakers, and anyone interested in understanding and addressing legal challenges in India and beyond.
